All in all, I find Lightroom to be a remarkably capable piece of software. While some may find the new, truer-to-raw interface to be jarring, I found that I did not miss the RAW window at all, especially once I got my feet wet. My general feeling is that Lightroom 5 will be an awesome tool for photo editing, if you are willing to put up with a few nitpicks. I still find it unpredictable as to what will or will not open when I press the r key. But all in all, I don't think that the RAW import and export process is any slower than in previous versions. The video quality is top notch and for those wanting to do video, this edition is ideal. Just be sure to educate yourself first. I read in some of the day one reviews that it was an unwanted incremental change. There usually is a day one film, I just wish that they would have done a batch of new presets for Lightroom and then released a new version.

I personally have had no issues with handling Lightroom for years. Lately I've been giving a little more attention to the Photoshop CC, the watermark thing is ridiculous though. I love my Photoshop and run it as a day one purchase. Photoshop is definitely my tool. I just want it to do what I want it to do. That's all. Lightroom 5.2 is an elegant product. It has a very user-friendly interface and can be used by newbies as well as advanced users. The new Lr Photo Import makes our lives a little easier and makes importing into Photoshop a breeze. Building the catalog was also effortless. Now that the catalog has been built and registered, we can quickly browse images. However, the biggest change in Lightroom 5.2 has come in the form of the "Develop module". I don't know what happens in the "Develop module" but the pre-defined settings for Lightroom 5.2 have surpassed Photoshop in many things. The video editing capabilities are excellent and so far, Lightroom's editing presets are also on par with Photoshop's. I just wish that Lightroom had more presets like Photoshop does. As a matter of fact, Lightroom's aperture and shutter are better than Photoshop's. And I'm not talking about Cinema EOS A7S. The kit lens in Lightroom is incredible. The Crop tool is more advanced than Photoshop's. The additional tools provided for asset management help immensely. Yes, it is a little more annoying to get in touch with the Adobe App store for apps, but most of those apps are ridiculously helpful. The only pang I'm experiencing is of missing the print preview feature provided by Photoshop. It's nice if you are looking for how a print will look on a print sheet and the quality of the print. But I guess it would be better to say, that the print document preview also functions as a print preview. As for the auto tagging, straight out of the box, the results were fine. However, as the technology improves, tagging can become a nightmare. In any case, Lightroom 5.2 has been a substantial improvement over its predecessor and marks a significant step forward in the quality of computerized editing tools.
